

A published history of your fire brigade is a precious document – not just for your brigade and your community, but for the whole of New Zealand’s research community, now and in the future.

So, when you publish, make sure you ...

- ✓ Reach the right people
- ✓ Check copyright requirements
- ✓ Tap into existing sources on NZ history

✓ Reach the right people

$ell a copy to the NZFS library in Wellington

NZFS library will purchase a copy of your publication – you don’t have to donate it!
Contact us on infoc@fire.org.nz or 0800 347 3542

All items in the NZFS library collection are listed on our catalogue, and can be searched and requested by NZFS people around NZ.

Send copies to the National Library of NZ

Guidelines on how to send your publication to National Library are here:
<http://natlib.govt.nz/publishers-and-authors/legal-deposit> The web page above gives you the address you need, and the form to use.

The National Library asks for copies of everything published in NZ; this is known as legal deposit. This makes them a one-stop shop for researchers; your publication will be part of a pool of knowledge on New Zealand.

Get an ISBN for your book

The National Library of NZ allocates International Standard Numbers (ISBNs) for NZ publications. It is free, and shouldn’t take long:
<http://natlib.govt.nz/forms/isn>

International Standard Numbers (ISBNs) are a publication's fingerprint, a world-wide identifier that helps publishers, suppliers, and libraries find your book.

✓ Copyright requirements

There are laws around how you can re-use an image, or an article that belongs to someone else – it is good to know them before you publish! The Copyright Council of NZ has some factsheets on this, and a phone number you can call.

✓ NZ history sources online - free!

Papers Past: a fully searchable database of NZ newspapers from 1839 to 1948

Digital NZ: here, you can search across newspapers, video, images and publications held in NZ libraries, museums, and government departments.

NZ Museums directory: your local museum is often a great starting point for research.

NZFS Library Services, August 2015, infoc@fire.org.nz